

Lack of good work in pop

ANNIE LENNOX says pop stars who do not use their fame to promote good causes are missing an opportunity. Speaking ahead of her appearance at the Festival of Politics in Edinburgh yesterday, said: 'I don't believe in "should" but I do feel for myself that, having come to a certain place in my life, this is very important to me.' She said music had the potential to provide a platform, adding: 'It's a missed opportunity if people don't ever use it.'

